Proofread and polish sample: before, after, change log

Work sample by AUTOMAIT. Fictional brief and brand; no client. AI-assisted; checked against the brief before delivery.

Brief / what the client asked: "Proofread the About paragraph for our website. Fix the errors but keep it sounding like us. Show me what you changed."

Fictional business (Kettlebrook Pool Care; name checked against the ABN Lookup business-name register and a quoted web search on the day of writing, 14 Nov 2026: no match). The BEFORE paragraph has 12 planted errors of the kinds we see most often in client documents. The AFTER fixes each one and adds one optional polish edit, listed separately so the client can see which changes were corrections and which were taste.

Change log

Corrections (12)

#	Before	After	Type	Why
1	Kettlebrook Pool Care have been	has been	Agreement	A company name is singular in standard business English; "have" slips in because the writer is thinking "we".
2	proud of the the relationships	the relationships	Doubled word	Spellcheck does not catch a doubled word. Reading aloud does.
3	Its a family business	It's a family business	Apostrophe	"It's" means "it is". "Its" is the possessive.
4	a family business, our technicians	a family business: our technicians	Comma splice	Two complete sentences joined by a comma. A colon keeps the link the writer intended.
5	recieve	receive	Spelling	The "i before e" exception everyone knows and still types wrong.
6	there always friendly	they're always friendly	Homophone	"They're" means "they are".
7	a range of service's	a range of services	Apostrophe	Plural, not possessive.
8	24 hour, and	24 hours, and	Number agreement	Plural noun after a number greater than one. ("A 24-hour service" is the hyphenated adjective form, which is not what is written here.)
9	less than 5 customers	fewer than five customers	Less/fewer; number style	Countable things take "fewer". Numbers under ten are spelled out in prose, matching "two days" in the same sentence.
10	Our team work hard	Our team works hard	Agreement	"Team" is treated as singular throughout, to match "has been" in sentence 1. Either convention is defensible; mixing them is not.
11	ready for Summer	ready for summer	Capitalisation	Seasons are lower case.
12	we treated every job	we treat every job	Tense	The rest of the paragraph is present tense.

Polish (optional, the client's call)

Before	After	Why
a range of services including weekly cleaning (after fix 7)

Before	After	Why
	a range of services, including weekly cleaning	A comma before "including" separates the list from the noun it describes. Not an error, just easier to read.
ongoing training and they're always friendly (after fix 6)	ongoing training, and they're always friendly	A comma before "and" when it joins two complete clauses. Optional; many house styles leave it out.
"at competitive prices", "like it matters"	unchanged	These are the owner's voice. We do not polish personality out of an About page.

Method (how we proofread)

1. Read once for meaning without touching anything, so we know what the writer intended.
2. Pass 2, mechanics: agreement, tense, apostrophes, homophones, doubled words, number style. Each fix is logged with its type.
3. Pass 3, consistency: one convention for the company as singular, for numbers, capitalisation and spelling (Australian here), applied across the whole document and not just the sentence we are in.
4. Pass 4, read aloud. This catches rhythm problems and doubled words that pass every spellcheck.
5. Corrections and polish are logged separately. Corrections are not optional; polish is the client's call.
6. Tracked changes in Word or Google Docs on request, so the client sees every edit in place.

Notes for the client

- Facts in the paragraph ("since 2015", "fewer than five customers") are the client's claims. We flag any a customer could challenge, but we do not verify them unless asked.
- AI-assisted and checked before delivery. The change log is written so every edit has a reason you can argue with.
